

PRESS RELEASE:

DOME ELASTICA

A solo show by Jesper Kristiansen

Rules are rules! How often haven't we been told so ? Our human existence is based on rules, systems and regulations. They are necessary conditions of life, with which we are constantly confronted. Rules are inevitable, so we must learn to live with them. But is it not also essential to live 'against' the rules ? Is it not every man's or woman's duty to limit social standardization, protect personal integrity and remain critical ? Rules are not meant just to be broken rebelliously. But does it sometimes serve a higher purpose to bend them to some extent ?

Thematically, DOME ELASTICA circles such questions. The key element of the installation is a playing field of white elastic band, stretched out in the exhibition space. A stage is set. A playing field of white lines is defined with strong references to the world of sports – or simply modern society. The structure is tight, yet soft and responsive. There is, in other words, a clash between material and purpose, between function and non-function. Everything goes in this 'game' – but then again, maybe not quite...

With DOME ELASTICA, Jesper Kristiansen focuses on these contradictions of life in a humorous and unpretentious fashion.
